Publication Statement

Milan, Italy : Edizioni Charta , 2008

Scope and Content

Published results of Bijana Ciric's research project Rejected Collections which brought together a collection of rejected artist's proposals dating from the 1980s.

The project aimed to put forth proposals that artists were willing to show without any overriding selection criteria, and without the author's own curatorial criteria. The work examines how, along with the rise of new infrastructural developments, the number of rejected proposals began to rise. It also examined how artists working methods have changed to mainly working on a proposal basis. How does this process of negotiation reflect artists' practices and exhibition processes, and is there a danger of artists becoming institutionalized? (240 pages ; 102)
